Organisation summary

The Emeka and Bunmi Anyaoku Foundation was founded in October 2008 by Chief Emeka Anyaoku and his wife, Bunmi Anyaoku. The organisation draws from the Chief Anyaoku's ten years of experience in service, as the third Commonwealth Secretary-General.

The Foundation headquarters also has a library containing relevant books and materials on extensive subjects suitable for research, and includes some of the personal papers of Chief Anyaoku from his days in office as Secretary-General of the Commonwealth of Nations. It is a public library for nearby university students and teachers in secondary schools to use.

His effort is to establish an organisation that avails scholars, researchers and the general public, to provide access to his repertoire of close interaction with the peoples and governments of the diverse, fifty-four member nations of the Commonwealth, spread across the six continents of the globe.

The Emeka and Bunmi Anyaoku Foundation's main mission is to promote the study and practice of democracy, management of diversity in Nigeria and Africa, respect for human rights and climate change. It also assists the education of the underprivileged children in Nigeria.
